Adobe Cs6 Master Collection Response Code Generator - D3A9FC6CB.Louis Vuitton has long had a finely tuned, almost secretive division of its company dedicated to overseeing the production of faux leather goods. While the Louis Vuitton handbags and wallets that longtime customers know best are handcrafted in the brand's corporate Paris factories (the brand's first factory was built in 1854), other goods like paper goods, backpacks, and eyewear are produced at one of three facilities in France and Spain. It's a skilful faux surprise: a bag that looks like a Louis Vuitton but isn't one. But while the Louis Vuitton handbags that have remained almost entirely authentic were a business decision, the faux line was a response to a shift in consumers' preferences away from all things "authentic," or made only in high-end industrial factories. The shift is connected to economic turbulence and what's been called the "postauthenticity" era, which is characterized by a new movement away from mass-produced and hypersophisticated, status-enhancing goods. High-end, high-status products such as Louis Vuitton bags can now be found in department stores like Bloomingdale's, as well as in Macy's, Neiman Marcus, Saks Fifth Avenue, and Barneys New York. So now Louis Vuitton is playing the authenticity card by making its faux leather goods at the same factories that make the real thing. It will start with "Milla" leather goods such as wallets, clutches, and leather accessories that will be available in department stores and department store chains. The Milla line, launched in Spain, was once the only Louis Vuitton faux option: a deceptively luxurious line produced by the real company and sold at not-too-cheap prices.
